A special correspondent of the New York Engineering Mining News has this to say about some of Arizona's mines: "With better railroad facilities to the mines Arizona will be able to beat Montana and Lake Superior. But few mines are yet known publicly. Gila and Pinal counties alone can, in time, furnish a great quantity. Globe is at the top in quality of ore. As a general proposition, mining in Arizona is not as active as in years gone by, nevertheless the mines are there; what is needed are more cheap railroad tacilities, as they have in Colorado."

ST. LOUIS AS A MINING CENTER.

The heavy transactions in mines and mining stocks in St. Louis during the year 1889 were phenominal, considering the fact that the business there is ot but a few years' growth. Mining is fast reaching a firm and Total, $23.545. legitimate basis in St. Louis and "wildcat" mines are no longer negotiable. Eastern people are beginning to appreciate the fact that mining is as legitimate as any other business, reequal ability, experience and business

It is refreshing to find an Eastern newspaper expressing such sound views on mining as the following from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat: "The mining business is a fair and legitimate business if conducted on a sound basis. There are few occupations but what have a legitimate and speculative side to them, and mining is no exception to that rule, and no one is obliged to adopt the gambling method instead of the safe and conservative side. If a man buys stock knowing that speculators are at the head of the enterprise he must not complain if the mine does not bring him the wealth he desires, because he is gambling with gamblers. A mine should be managed by a man with a fair knowledge of practical mining, and when the same amount of caution and experience is brought to bear upon mining that is exercised in other business the chances of failure are less than in many other industries. The latter clause, however, must be modified with the thought that the mine is a mine and not an unknown prospect. lost, knowing they were buying for
